I　次の文章の下線部を和訳しなさい。

You might have seen this before. The line on the bottom looks longer than the line on the top. You know it isn't, but even if you already know, even if you measure the lines yourself and confirm that they are the same, you keep seeing them as different lengths.

My glasses have a custom lens to correct for my personal sight problem. But when I look at this optical illusion, I still misinterpret what I see, just like everyone else. This is because illusions don't happen in our eyes, they happen in our brains. They are systematic misinterpretations, unrelated to individual sight problems. Knowing that most people are tricked means you don't need to be embarrassed. Instead you can be curious: how does the illusion work?

The mental health crisis among young people is an emergency — and social media has emerged as an important contributor. Adolescents who spend more than three hours a day on social media face double the risk of anxiety and depression symptoms, and the average daily use in this age group, as of the summer of 2023, was 4.8 hours. Additionally, nearly half of adolescents say social media makes them feel worse about their bodies.

歩く趣味は人を選ばない。それどころか，歩くことなどつまらないと思っている人こそ，この趣味にはまりやすい。

とっつきは悪いが，話してみるとすっかり気が合ってしまったという人がいる。最初のイメージがあまりよくなかっただけに，打ち解けるとかえって親しみが増すことがある。

歩くことはつまらないと思っていた人も，これと似たような経験をすることがある。思い違い，食わず嫌いといったような感覚で，誤解が解けると親しみがぐっと増す。

一度歩く楽しさを知れば，ほとんどの人が歩くのが好きになる。歩く趣味はそれくらい間口が広く，奥が深い。これが歩く趣味の大きな魅力，王の王たるゆえんだろう。

歩く趣味は人を選ばないから，その気にさえなれば誰でもできる。年齢も性別も関係なく，日常的に歩いている人はそれだけで「歩きの達人」になる。しかも，歩きの達人は外観だけではそれとわからない。きゃしゃなご婦人だったり，顔に深いしわを刻んだ熟年の男性だったりする。

こういう人たちといっしょに自然の中を歩いていると，ふだんあまり歩かない若者の方がへばってしまうことがある。

ふうふう言ってへたり込んでいる若者に，きゃしゃなご婦人が「だいじょうぶですか」などと声をかけ，飲み物を分けてあげたりする。あるいは，熟年の達人が「荷物が多すぎるようだから，少しもってあげよう」などと助け船を出す。

ふだんから歩き込んでいる人は贅肉がそぎ落とされ，スリムな体型になっている。意識して歩いていれば，誰でもこうした歩きの達人になれる。

歩く趣味にはすぐれた運動神経はいらない。研ぎ澄まされた反射神経もとりわけ必要ない。歩く趣味は人を選ばないだけに，どんな人でも「歩きの達人」になれる。必要なのは「継続」の二文字だけだ。

Ⅲ 次の文章を読んで，設問に答えなさい。

Keeping eye contact is something that many people find hard to do, but it is important when you are trying to get your point across to people and show them you are serious about what you are saying. For example, if you go in to talk to your boss and ask for a raise, he is going to be far more likely to take you seriously if you are looking him in the eyes rather than glancing downward. If you are making a business proposal, people will be more likely to trust you and believe in your ideas if they see that you are confident, sure of yourself, and making eye contact with them.

I spend a lot of time encouraging my students to make eye contact. In order to give them practice (1), I put the kids in groups of two. I then tell them that making eye contact when you make a statement gives what you are saying more emphasis and emotion. When you look away or down at the floor, it shows you aren't sure of what you are saying and that you possibly aren't telling the truth. I also tell them that I have heard that repeated glances to the upper left-hand side mean you are being dishonest. Once they are in their groups, I have them practice talking to each other, taking note of how effective they are at maintaining eye contact with their partners.

Making eye contact is not only a way to show confidence, but it is also an important way to show respect. In class, when a student is expressing an opinion, I make sure all of the other students turn and are focused on that individual. (2) I don't allow them to raise their hands to make additional comments until that person is finished, because, if they do, it looks as if they are more concerned with what they want to say than with the opinions of the speaker. I tell them to imagine what it would be like if they were trying to express a thought and everyone around them kept waving their hands. It would make them feel like their opinions had no value, and so, therefore, we don't do it.

I can remember when I was in school it was awfully hard to get lost in thought while staring at the teacher. Therefore, as a teacher I make sure to have all eyes on me at all times. That way, I can see the looks on the students' faces and can tell if they are confused and lost or entertained and attentive. Also, since I am a very visual learner and teacher, I am constantly making motions with my hands and on the board, and I want the kids to follow along with me and know exactly what I mean.

I have worked in fast food. I've spent countless hours making the donuts at a donut shop and waiting tables at various restaurants. Serving the public can be a thrill, but it can also be torture when you have to deal with difficult customers. I can remember how I always liked it when people would look me in the eyes to give their order. It is far more respectful to look a person in the face. As they were leaving, I always expected them to say thank you, but many didn't, and it embarrassed me. What were they thinking? Many who did say thank you just said it as they turned away or drove off. Why not take one second to look the person in the eyes and say thank you as if you mean it?

I try to get my students to practice doing this (3) with various adults in the school who aren't teachers. Often, cafeteria workers, secretaries, and teachers' assistants aren't considered worthy of the respect teachers get, and I work hard to change that image in the minds of my students. I explain to the students the role of each person at the school and how his or her job makes it possible for kids to get a great education. I then tell them that people work harder and with more effort if they feel they are appreciated and that they are making a difference. I make sure I model the type of behavior I expect, as I interact with all members of the staff in a friendly and respectful manner. It doesn't take much effort before the students are following my lead, and the results are always obvious. When we go to the lunchroom, the students aren't allowed to talk in the line, and when they get their food, they must look the cafeteria workers in the eyes and say "May I" when asking for anything. In turn, they always thank the lunchroom workers and tell them to have a good day. The workers always comment on how wonderful the class is and how much they appreciate the respect.

(4) No matter how we are interacting with others around us and regardless of what we are saying, we will be taken more seriously and our actions will be much more appreciated if they come with eye contact.
