I　空欄に最も適切なものを選び、(A)〜(D)で答えなさい。

設問 1

Taxi Driver: Where would you like to go?

Passenger: Could you please take me to the Natural History Museum?

Taxi Driver: Oh sure, that's the museum with dinosaur skeletons. No problem—it's just a few minutes from (1).

Passenger: I was trying to walk to the museum in this heavy rain.

Taxi Driver: You must love (2) at dinosaurs to risk getting so wet!

Passenger: Actually I'm only going to the museum to have lunch with an old friend.

Taxi Driver: So you mean there's a restaurant inside the museum? Great! What kind of food (3)?

Passenger: It's a café, and their coffee and sandwiches are excellent. But the nice thing is you don't have to buy a ticket to the museum to eat there.

Taxi Driver: Well, here we are—this is the main entrance to the museum. Is this (4) you want me to drop you?

Passenger: There's another entrance to the museum on the south side, where the café is. Can you take me there (5)?

1. (A) there　(B) then　(C) it　(D) here

2. (A) walking to see　(B) trying to visit　(C) going to look　(D) hanging out

3. (A) are they　(B) are there　(C) is it　(D) does it

4. (A) what　(B) where　(C) how　(D) when

5. (A) instead　(B) after　(C) before　(D) either

設問 2

Language is one these magical abilities that we humans (1). With words, we can transmit really complicated thoughts to one another. (2) of this ability, we humans are able to transmit our ideas across vast reaches of space and time. We're able to send knowledge (3) minds. I can put a completely new idea in your mind right now. I could say, "Imagine a jellyfish* waltzing* in a library while thinking about quantum mechanics*." Now, you probably (4) had that thought before. But now I've made you think it, through language. Does this mean that the language we speak shapes the way we think? (5) is an ancient question.

5. (A) Now (B) This (C) Still (D) Then

II 以下の設問に答えなさい。

設問１　下線部に最も適切なものを選び、(A)〜(D)で答えなさい。

1.

Mike:　I'm excited about our camping trip next weekend. It's been a long time since we've been to the mountains where that beautiful lake is. I'm just wondering what kind of food to bring this time for cooking on the campfire.

Amy: _____

(A) That's a good idea, and let's not forget to bring our cameras so we can take extra nice photos at the party.

(B) You told me you would be going to your office on that day. Why did you change your mind?

(C) The food court in the new mall has some delicious restaurants, and the kids enjoy playing the video games there.

(D) Let's grill vegetables over the fire like last time, and you know the kids love roasting marshmallows on a stick.

Jack:　A new clothes store just opened up downtown. It's a second-hand store, so we can probably find good deals. Do you want to go check it out with me tomorrow afternoon? I can drive us in my car since I finally got my driver's license last week!

Ben: _____

(A) I saw it on the internet too. It's the biggest shopping mall in the city, and there are restaurants inside too.

(B) That sounds like fun, but are you sure the clothes are in good condition? I usually like to buy things new.

(C) Sorry but my car is being repaired now, so we would have to take a bus there. Do you know how far it is?

(D) I really think we could find better deals at the music store in my neighborhood, since it's a discount store.

3.

Sarah: This is the first time I've ever been to a zoo. Thanks for taking me. I didn't know it would be so big! And I'm really surprised to see people having picnics under the trees with their kids. I thought zoos were just for watching animals, but this feels like a giant park or garden with animals included.

Anna: _____

(A) I used to think that way about zoos too, but recently they are changing to attract more people, especially families with young children.

(B) The problem is most of the parks in the city don't have restaurants nearby, so more people are having picnics.

(C) The biggest gardens are usually not found in the city, so it's too hard for families with children to drive there.

(D) The zoo I used to visit when I was a child had a lot of big animals like giraffes and elephants, but I was disappointed they didn't have more marine animals.

設問２　下線部に最も適切なものを選び、(A)〜(F)で答えなさい。

Dentist: So you said you are having pain in your lower jaw. How long have you been feeling this pain?

Patient: 1. _____

Last night the pain was so bad I couldn't even sleep.

Dentist: That's not good at all. You should have come to see me sooner. Also, you said you think the problem is your wisdom teeth*.

2. _____

Patient: Yes I have, and both my father and grandmother had painful wisdom teeth.

3. _____

Dentist: I see. It's true that wisdom teeth can cause infections and severe pain. But right now it doesn't look like there is an infection in your jaw.

4. _____

That way we can be sure it's your wisdom teeth and not something else. The x-ray will show everything that's going on with your teeth.

Patient: 5. _____

注

*wisdom teeth: 親知らず

(A) In fact, my grandmother needed to have her wisdom teeth removed. She was getting infections.

(B) Why do you think it's your wisdom teeth? Have you had that problem before?

(C) Did your grandmother need to have her wisdom teeth removed in surgery?

(D) The first thing we need is to take an x-ray to see what the real problem is.

(E) It's been more than 2 weeks. The pain usually goes away after a week or two, but it's much worse now.

(F) That's good because it's been a long time since I've had my teeth checked by a dentist.

III 次の英文を読んで、設問に答えなさい。

It's never been easy for me to be a "good sport." A "good sport" is someone who doesn't get mad when they lose a game. Someone who keeps trying to do their best even when things aren't going so well. I suppose a good sport is someone who believes, as the popular saying goes, "It's not whether you win or lose, but how you play the game."

(A)

When I started playing squash a few years ago, the biggest challenge for me was not the game itself, but my attitude. I literally felt sick if I lost an important game. Or if I started losing half way through, I would feel so discouraged, I would just give up on trying to win. When I realized playing wasn't fun anymore, I decided I had to work on mental training. I really wanted to become a good sport. I started concentrating more on having a good time and on learning something positive from my mistakes. Like one famous squash player said, "You always learn something, especially when you lose." I also began to learn a lot from watching other people play.

(B)

① So the first time I went to the Japan Open, where some of the world's top players come, I experienced extreme culture shock. Among many of the European and American players, the idea of "the good sport" seemed to have no meaning at all. Both women and men screamed at the referees, used bad language on the court, threw down their rackets when they lost and left the court in anger. I'll never forget one woman who even hit her head against the wall over and over when she missed shots.

(C)

I wondered how a person could lose their temper on the court and still play the game well. But to my surprise, the most emotional players often won. In fact, very few of the Japanese players ever make it to the finals. That means the final day of the tournament is quite a display of wild emotions by the mostly European players.

(D)

Squash players in Japan often discuss why Japanese players don't win in international tournaments. Is it because squash is still a fairly new sport here? Or could it be that technique is emphasized too much? Maybe squash school coaches expect too much conformity* among their students. I can remember my own frustration once when it felt more natural to turn to the left after a shot, but the coach insisted that everyone turn to the right. If players were encouraged to show more passion and individuality on the court, would their personal strength come out more?

(E)

I don't know the answers. But what I do know is that, for me, being a good sport feels a lot better than being a bad sport. And my squash heroes are not the ones who win in a great passion, but rather the ones who play the game with dignity and grace, with a fighting spirit up to the last point. That's the kind of "winner" I want to be, especially when I lose.

設問

1. 以下の段落が入る最も適切な箇所を、文中に示された(A)〜(E)から選びなさい。

I don't know what Japanese children are taught about mental attitude in sports, but I'm always amazed when I watch good players in Japan play squash. Occasionally someone will yell out or argue with the referee, but generally, Japanese players are fairly quiet and controlled. They seem to concentrate on their technique and fight to the end, even when the score is 0-9. Watching that kind of playing has really inspired me to be a better sport as well.

2. 下線部①を日本語に訳しなさい。

3. この英文にタイトルをつけるとすれば、最も適切なものはどれか。以下の(A)〜(D)から選びなさい。

   (A) How to win the game

   (B) How to teach squash

   (C) How to play the game

   (D) How to watch squash games

4. 本文の内容を踏まえ、次の質問に英語で答えなさい。

   (1) How did the author overcome her difficulty as a squash beginner?

   (2) What kind of winner would the author like to be?

IV 以下は、アフリカのエリトリア国にルーツをもつアメリカの詩人アラセリス・ギルメイ（1977- ）が、若い読者に向けて、本を読むことがどういうことかを語った手紙である。これを読んで設問に答えなさい。

Dearest You*,

Because it takes time for even light to travel the distances of our universe, ①the starlight we see now is from the past. The star sometimes called the North Star*, for example, is so far away that when we look up at it, we are seeing light sent to us hundreds of years ago. There is even a star nicknamed Icarus* whose light, astronomers have calculated, reaches us from 9 billion breathtaking light-years away*.

②A sentence, even this one, is, in a way, like starlight. It reaches us from a past and we gaze for a moment at its messages. But a sentence doesn't just reach and change us, we also change it. See: I am writing this sentence now (April 20th, 2018), on a day that, by the time you read this, will have already passed. Now, in my world, kids and birds are shouting in the schoolyard. Sparrows* are sharing the bread. And you, dear reader, are reading these words on some future day, carrying the text with the breath of your body. Perhaps ③as you read, someone is cooking garlic and onions in the pot, or rain is falling loudly down onto your grandmother's garden. The sentence is a time machine, giving us access to one another's presents and histories*. For example, if I say "My grandmother lived with her chicken at the top of a hill in Emba Derho*," I might picture my grandmother with shining eyes, alone except for her chicken in a hudmo* at the top of a hill. But you might picture your own beloved grandmother who lives not at the top of a hill but in a basement apartment, with one cat and very old television. Suddenly you are filling the words and page with what you know. And just like that, ④we become each other's co-authors*. With each new reader, the sentence becomes a new version of itself. And so the world.

A text is a trail* of its writer's imagination. It is the remnant* of one planet being found by another (you). And if there are diamonds⑤ here, dear reader, it is because you made them.

Sincerely yours,

Aracelis
