令和７年度前期日程入学試験問題

英　語 A

人文社会科学部

工　学　部

農　学　部

地域未来共創学環

注 意 事 項

① 試験開始の指示があるまで，この問題冊子の中を見てはいけません。

② 問題冊子は，８ページ(表紙，白紙を除く)です。試験開始後，確認しなさい。

③ 解答は，解答用紙の指定の欄に記入しなさい。

④ 受験番号は，解答用紙の指定の欄に正しく記入しなさい。

1 次の英文を読んで，設問に答えなさい。

Frida Kahlo* was an extraordinary artist who explored her own identity through art. She challenged the way that women had traditionally been shown in paintings and refused to behave in a typical way of her time. During her life, she had some success as an artist, but (1) it was only after her death that people understood the great importance of her work, and how she had changed the world for women and art. Now she is a very famous artist.

In September 1925, when she was eighteen years old, Kahlo was in (2) a serious bus crash while on the way home from school. In the terrible accident, a metal bar went through her body, and many of the bones in her feet, back, and legs were broken. Kahlo nearly died, and she had to lie in bed for months at her family home in Mexico City. The accident changed everything for Kahlo: before, she had wanted to become a doctor; after, she knew that she could no longer follow this dream because her health was not good enough.

Kahlo had been interested in art from an early age, so one day, while she was in bed after the accident, her father lent her some of his paints and brushes. Her mother bought her a wooden holder to keep paper in front of her in bed, and Kahlo asked for a large mirror to go on top of this. This helped her to see herself easily. Kahlo now began to paint in bed — sometimes trying self-portraits using the big mirror. She later explained her lifelong interest in self-portrait painting and why she used herself as a subject for paintings. "I paint myself because I am often alone," she said. "And I am the subject I know best."

Kahlo began to think that becoming an artist could one day be possible, although (3) it would not be an easy path. Most well-known artists at that time were men, and it was often difficult for women to get training or have their own art shows.

Kahlo chose to paint herself in this way to make people stop and think.

She was challenging traditional ideas of beauty, which was an extremely unusual thing to do at this time — when most paintings of women were by men, and showed women in a typically pretty way. But (4)Kahlo was doing something different. She was refusing to pretend to be perfect and was not afraid to show herself as she really was.

(Janet Hardy-Gould, "Frida Kahlo," Women Who Made a Difference, Oxford University Press, 2024. 一部変更)

〔注〕 Frida Kahlo：フリーダ・カーロ

問 1　下線部(1)を日本語に訳しなさい。

問 2　下線部(2)の内容と影響を，本文に即して，日本語で具体的に説明しなさい。

問 3　下線部(3)の内容を，本文に即して，日本語で具体的に説明しなさい。

問 4　下線部(4)の内容を，本文に即して，日本語で具体的に説明しなさい。

2 次の英文を読んで，設問に答えなさい。

You may find yourself worrying over something you said or something you should have done. Life can cause us a lot of trouble with regrets, especially if you have a tendency to spend a lot of time thinking about things. In fact, (1) the average British person spends 110 hours a year regretting their choices or mistakes — that's nearly five days out of 365 when we're regretting what could have been. Our biggest worries are hesitating in relationships, losing touch with friends, not traveling when we had the opportunity, and not going for better paid jobs or saving for old age. Other common regrets include not looking after our health, taking life too seriously, and not taking the time to learn an instrument or new language. But (2) while we can't change the past, life's disappointments can be softened if we shift our way of thinking. Here's how.

The emotion most likely to be at the root of regret is fear. "Missed opportunities often relate to fear," says a life coach. "People turn down an opportunity because they don't believe they are qualified for the job or don't believe in themselves enough to try, or doubt that they will fit in or be able to cope."

Fear of failing is a key factor. "There are (3) two types of regret," says a psychologist. "One: we make a mistake and regret it. And two: we never tried to go after something we thought we wanted, so we regret that we never tried. The second is more damaging — failing hurts, but not trying appears to hurt more."

Go easy on yourself, and be aware that the decisions you made at the time were based on the information that you had at that time — and the person you were then.

These are the psychologist's tips for coping with any regrets.

Preparation is key. Develop skills to increase your emotional flexibility to life's hardships.

Prepare for challenges, expect difficulties, but remember that life is beautiful and be aware that things will likely work out.

Try to learn from your regretful experiences and move forward.

Take risks. (4)It's better to try and fail than to worry later about what could have been.

(Debra Waters, "Time to Accept the Past," Psychology Now, Vol. 8, 2024. 一部変更)

問 1　下線部(1)を日本語に訳しなさい。

問 2　下線部(2)を日本語に訳しなさい。

問 3　下線部(3)の内容を，本文に即して，日本語で具体的に説明しなさい。

問 4　下線部(4)を日本語に訳しなさい。

3 次の英文を読んで，設問に英語で答えなさい。

People living about 10,000 years ago were hunter-gatherers. They hunted wild sheep, gazelles*, rabbits, and ducks. They gathered wild wheat plants, onions, lentils*, and figs*. They fished along the seacoast and in the lakes and rivers, catching fish, crabs, and oysters.

Humans were already the most powerful animal around. But they didn't try to control anybody. They gathered plants but didn't tell them where to grow. They hunted animals but didn't tell them where to go.

Life wasn't always pleasant. There were still some dangerous creatures around, like snakes, and there were all kinds of disasters, from snowstorms to heat waves. Occasionally, there were also rough and violent fights with other groups nearby — all through history some people were often unkind to one another.

Yet, most of the time, people had enough to eat, and a lot of free time to tell ghost stories, sleep in camp, or visit others to celebrate some festival. Wars were rare. Diseases which resulted in death were rare. And famines were rare.

When the gazelles moved somewhere else, or when there were no more ripe figs nearby, people just moved their camp to another place, following the gazelles and looking for the figs elsewhere.

But in some special places, there was so much to eat that people rarely needed to move their camps. They could stay in the same place all year round. These special places were full of unique plants. The plants weren't big or beautiful, but they changed the entire world. These plants were the cereals.

You probably eat cereals every day. Wheat, barley*, rice, maize*, and millet* are cereals. Bread, cookies, cakes, pasta, and noodles are made from cereals. Breakfast cereals are also made from cereals. But until about 10,000 years ago, humans seldom ate cereals.

Cereals weren't very common. Wheat, for example, didn't grow at all in America, China, or Australia. Only some areas in the Middle East had wheat, and even there, we're not talking entire wheat fields. Some wheat plants grew on one hill, and others on another hill. So even in the Middle East, most bands hardly bothered with cereals . . . but some did.

We don't know exactly when or where some humans became particularly interested in cereals, but we can try to imagine it. Perhaps one day a girl from a band that wandered around looking for all kinds of plants and animals met a girl from another band that spent most of the time in just one place and gathered lots of wheat.

Some bands established permanent villages in the Middle East more than 10,000 years ago. If they stored enough cereal grains, people didn't need to move much. With time, it actually became more difficult to move because people collected all kinds of stuff in their villages. Most hunter-gatherers had few possessions, so if they decided to go, they just got up and walked. For the cereal people, it wasn't so easy.

Sometimes those who gathered lots of wheat looked at all the things they had and were very pleased with themselves.

Wheat grains are very small. So, every time cereal people gathered wheat and carried it back to their village, some grains fell along the way and were lost. Do you get upset if you lose something like your smartphone? Probably. You might spend hours looking for it. But when our ancestors lost a few grains of wheat, they hardly noticed, and they certainly didn't bother looking for them. They didn't think it was important.

But actually, it was very important.

When you lose your smartphone, it doesn't grow into a smartphone tree. But when people lost grains of wheat, the grains grew into new wheat plants. That's why more and more wheat began growing along the trails through which people walked and around the sites where people lived.

This eventually gave some people a new idea. They liked having lots of grain in storage but were less keen on gathering it in the hills and carrying it back to the village. That was more difficult and more boring than fishing in the river or climbing trees to steal eggs. Besides, sometimes there was a drought and very little wheat grew. So the villagers looked for ways to make life easier — to have lots of grains without working too hard. So they stored them.

(Yuval Noah Harari, Unstoppable Us: Why the World Isn't Fair, Vol. 2, Bright Matter Books, 2024. 一部変更)

〔注〕 gazelle：ガゼル
lentil：レンズマメ
fig：イチジク
barley：大麦
maize：トウモロコシ(の実)
millet：アワ，キビなどの雑穀

【設問】

1. Why wasn't life always pleasant 10,000 years ago?

2. What kind of new idea did some people have when they saw more and more wheat grow along the roads through which people walked and around the sites where they lived?

3. Why did humans seldom eat cereals until 10,000 years ago?

4. What did people who lived about 10,000 years ago do for getting food?

5. What did our ancestors do when they lost a few grains of wheat?

4 下線部(1)と(2)の内容とその下線部が書かれている文脈の両方を咀嚼(そしゃく)し，内容と文脈の両方に相応しい英語で「表現」しなさい。

コミュニケーション力を高めるというと，聞き上手より話し上手になることをイメージする人が多い。だが，ビジネスで必要なコミュニケーション力としては，話し上手より聞き上手のコツを身につけるほうがはるかに重要となる。なぜなら，聞き上手な人のほうが相手に大きな満足を与えることができるからである。(1)

話し上手な人は，その場を盛り上げたりして人を楽しませることができるものの，どちらかと言えば自分自身がしゃべることでスッキリする感じがある。その分，相手をストレスフルな状態にしてしまうことがある。たとえば，しゃべりが得意だと自認する人は，ときに一方的にしゃべりすぎて，相手をうんざりさせたり，イライラさせたりすることがある。

(中略)

それに対して，聞き上手な人は，相手の話にじっくり耳を傾けることで，相手の気持ちをスッキリさせることができる。ゆえに，聞き上手な人の方が，相手にとって報酬価の高い存在と言える。口べたな人が意外に好感を与えたりするのも，自分がしゃべりに自信がない分，聞き役に徹するため，相手は気持ちよくしゃべることができるからである。(2)

(榎本博明『「指示通り」ができない人たち』日本経済新聞出版．2024)