2025年度

G１　英　語

人文社会科学部
2月25日(火)　教育学部（学校教育教員養成課程）
【前期日程】　【音楽教育・美術教育・保健体育教育専修は除く】
情報学部（情報社会学科，行動情報学科）
グローバル共創科学部

13：00～14：20

注意事項

試験開始前

1　監督者の指示があるまで，問題冊子，解答用紙に手を触れてはいけません。

2　監督者の指示に従って，全部の解答用紙（３枚）に受験番号を記入しなさい。

試験開始後

3　この問題冊子は，９ページあります。はじめに，問題冊子，解答用紙を確かめ，枚数の不足や，印刷の不鮮明なもの，ページの落丁・乱丁があった場合は，手をあげて監督者に申し出なさい。

4　解答はすべて解答用紙に記入しなさい。

5　問題は，声を出して読んではいけません。

6　配点は，比率(%)で表示してあります。

試験終了後

7　問題冊子は，必ず持ち帰りなさい。

1 Read the following passage and answer the questions. (30 %)

Notes

bark 吠える spank お尻をたたく growl うなる
a fine mess 面倒なこと，大変なこと
leash つなぎひも

Olaf doesn't have any brothers or sisters old enough to play with him, but he has a dog named Skip. Now I am going to tell you how Olaf got Skip, just as he told it to us.

Between our village, Noisy Village, and the real village there lives a shoemaker whose name is Mr. Kind. His name is Kind, but he isn't kind, not the least. He never has our shoes ready when we go to pick them up, even if he has promised us ever so many times.

He owned Skip before Olaf, but he was never kind to Skip, who was the meanest dog in the whole area. He always had to be tied to his doghouse, and every time we took shoes to Mr. Kind, Skip ran out of his house and barked. We were so scared of Skip that we never went near him. We were scared of the shoemaker too, because he was always in a bad mood and because he said, "Children are wild and should get spanked every day." Skip got spanked often too, although he was a dog and not a child. And Mr. Kind forgot to give Skip food most of the time.

When Skip lived with the shoemaker, I thought he was scary and mean. He was dirty and hairy and he growled or barked all the time, but now I think he is a nice and pretty dog. Olaf has made him nice because he is so nice himself.

One day when Olaf went to the shoemaker with his shoes, Skip ran out, as usual, and barked and looked as if he wanted to hurt Olaf. Olaf stopped and talked to him. He said, "You are a nice dog and you shouldn't bark like that." Of course he stayed far enough away so that Skip couldn't bite him, but Skip didn't act like a nice dog at all and looked just as dangerous as ever.

When Olaf came back a few days later to get his shoes, he brought along a bone with meat on it for Skip. Skip barked and growled, but he was so hungry that he started biting on the bone. All the time he was eating, Olaf stood there and told him that he was a nice dog and a good dog.

Olaf's shoes weren't ready and he had to go back and ask for them several times, and every time he brought something good for Skip. Then one day Skip didn't growl at Olaf but just barked the way dogs do when they see someone they like. So Olaf went over and patted him on the head, and Skip licked his hand.

One day not long after that, the shoemaker fell and hurt his leg. Of course he didn't care if Skip got any food or not. Olaf felt so sorry for Skip that he went in and asked Mr. Kind if he could take care of him while Mr. Kind was in bed with his leg.

Mr. Kind said, "Ha, that would be a fine mess. He'd jump and attack you as soon as you got near him."

But Olaf went out to Skip and patted him, and the shoemaker looked out the window and watched. And then he said that Olaf could take care of Skip since he couldn't do it himself.

First Olaf cleaned Skip's doghouse and then filled his water dish with fresh water. Then he gave him a lot of food. After that he took him for a long walk all the way home to Noisy Village, and Skip jumped and barked with joy, for he had been tied up a long time and didn't like it. Every day, as long as Mr. Kind had to take care of his hurt leg, Olaf took Skip out for a run. We ran with them too, but Skip liked Olaf best. No one else could hold his leash, because he growled.

When the shoemaker's leg got well he said to Olaf, "Now we've had enough of this playing. The dog is a watchdog and should stay in his doghouse."

Skip thought he was going for a walk with Olaf that day as usual, and when Olaf left without him he made long, sad noises. Olaf too was sad for days and days. Finally his father couldn't stand to see him so unhappy, so he bought Skip from Mr. Kind and gave him to Olaf. All of us children in Noisy Village went over to Olaf's house and watched while Olaf gave Skip a bath. We helped a little. When Skip had been bathed and dried and brushed, he looked like a different dog.

Now he is never angry and never needs to walk on a leash. He sleeps every night under Olaf's bed, and when all of us Noisy Village children come home from school, Skip comes to meet Olaf and carries his school bag. But he will never go as far as Mr. Kind's house. Maybe he's afraid that Mr. Kind will come out and take him back.

出典：Astrid Lindgren (1947) Alla vi barn i Bullerbyn, translated by Florence Lamborn The Children of Noisy Village, 1988, London: Puffin Books, pp. 25–29. 一部改編

Questions. Answer all questions in Japanese except Question 1.

1. Who was the owner of the dog at first? Choose the person from the following and write (a), (b), (c), or (d).
   (a) Mr. Kind
   (b) Olaf
   (c) Olaf's father
   (d) Skip

2. How did Olaf first try to become friends with Skip?

3. Olaf did a number of things for Skip while the shoemaker was in bed with his leg. List four of them.

4. What does $\boxed{\text{it}}$ refer to in the story?

5. What did Olaf's father do for him after he had been sad for days and days?

6. Why doesn't Skip go as far as Mr. Kind's house anymore?

2 Each sentence has four underlined items, (a), (b), (c), and (d). Identify the item that needs to be corrected. Then correctly rewrite the entire item without changing the meaning of the sentence. (10 %)

Example: I've (a)ever (b)visited Hawaii (c)but would like to (d)sometime.

Answer:

Example
(a)	never

1. This is (a)the last party (b)where Yuko (c)and Jiro talked (d)to each other at.

2. (a)By the time Taro and Hanako (b)arrived, their mother will (c)have (d)recovered.

3. I have not (a)been to New York (b)yet, (c)and my wife has not (d)neither.

4. The (a)recent earthquake has only brought a (b)small amount of (c)damages to our office building, so I suppose we (d)were very lucky.

5. Things are (a)going well (b)with our project; we (c)didn't have any technical or (d)financial problems so far.

3 Read the following passage and the four replies to it, then answer the questions. (25 %)

Notes

so-called いわゆる　　depression うつ病

anxiety 心配，不安　　sibling 兄弟姉妹

"How do you take care of so many children? How do you do it?"

As parents of a very large family, my wife and I hear that question a lot. Sometimes I answer by explaining my techniques for making a very large number of sandwiches and for taking our children to the zoo.

But if I'm honest, there are two truer answers to "How do you do it?" One is that we don't do a lot of extra activities: the kids don't join sports teams that require a lot of time and travel, they don't participate in Saturday morning arts and crafts, and we don't take trips to Disney World.

The other is that the "you" who makes Sunday morning breakfast, puts together do-it-yourself furniture, and walks the first-grader to school includes not only me and my wife but also our older kids. The best way to make parenting and childhood happier and less stressful is to have more kids, not fewer of them.

I grew up with three older brothers, and my wife is the fourth of eight. What we learned from our childhood families, and what the studies show is that so-called examples of "good" parenting are really examples of parents doing much more than they should to help their children.

Some people say that families getting smaller is progress. "With fewer children to support," Brookings Institution researcher Isabel Sawhill once wrote, "parents and society can both invest more in each child, helping them to climb the ladder of success and become productive citizens in their adult years."

Economists have a name for this way of thinking: the quantity-quality trade-off, which means having less children but giving each child a higher quality of education. However, there's nothing high-quality about the intensive parenting that is common in today's middle and upper-middle classes. Racing your kid from school to a tutoring session or to a baseball tournament that requires travel takes from him the opportunity to develop independence and experience self-determination. The fast-paced rat race might increase your kids' chances of entering a famous university, but it probably prevents them from developing the habits that adults need.

Studies show that more parental control leads to more anxiety and depression. Children who have more independent play not only have a lot of fun but are also more likely to develop the ability to handle life's many stresses.

A large family saves parents from mistakenly thinking that they can be in control of everything in their children's lives. In 2018, a survey of 7,000 U.S. mothers found that while mothers of three were more stressed than moms of one or two, mothers of four were less stressed.

The long-term effect of having many brothers and sisters is shown clearly by a Norwegian study of 114,500 children that found that those in larger families had better mental health.

The best large-family model is neither focused on the children nor focused on the parent but focused on the family. Everyone has roles to play in creating a common good. Children in this model still have the freedom and independence to decide who they want to be. Large families that are very tiring for parents are only so because parents are trying too hard to watch over and control almost every moment of their children's lives.

Reply from Mr. Tyler:

I was the second-oldest child in a family of seven, and I spent my teenage years taking care of babies and washing clothes and preparing lunches while all my friends were at the movies and playing baseball and talking with girls. I hated my parents, and I will never get back the childhood they took from me.

Reply from Ms. Foster:

This article shows that the author does not care about our planet Earth. Rich people having lots of children is very selfish. For the good of the planet, I have chosen not to have children.

Reply from Mr. Longstreet:

I am the oldest in a large family. I do not have children and my next oldest sibling also decided not to have children. The stress of trying to manage childcare in a family with two working parents and a not-so-big income made us see that we never wanted to have children.

Reply from Ms. Coleman:

My brother and sister-in-law had eight children, and I often had to help them. So far, only one of those children wants kids. The rest wisely said, "No thanks." Having less children is definitely better.

出典：Timothy P. Carney "The Ideal Number of Kids in a Family: Four (at a Minimum)". The Washington Post. April 30, 2024. (https://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/2024/04/30/family-size-big-families/). 一部改編

Questions.

1. There is the word you in the sentence, "How do [you] do it?" According to the author's explanation, who are the you in his family? Answer in Japanese.

2. The author mentions several possible disadvantages of children joining "the fast-paced rat race." What is one of them? Answer in Japanese.

3. The author introduces ideas from 1) Isabel Sawhill, 2) a survey of 7,000 U.S. mothers, and 3) a Norwegian study. Which two of the three sources provide information that supports the author's opinion? Choose the correct combination from the following and write (a), (b), or (c) on the answer sheet.
   (a) Isabel Sawhill and the survey of 7,000 U.S. mothers
   (b) Isabel Sawhill and the Norwegian study
   (c) The survey of 7,000 U.S. mothers and the Norwegian study

4. Choose the correct statement from the choices below. Write (a), (b), (c), or (d) on the answer sheet.
   (a) All four of the people writing replies agree with the main idea of the article.
   (b) All four of the people writing replies disagree with the main idea of the article.
   (c) Three people writing replies agree with the main idea of the article, while one disagrees.
   (d) Two people writing replies agree with the main idea of the article, while two disagree.

5. Three of the four people writing replies to the article make a point based on personal experience. Which one of the four does not? Write this person's name, in English, on the answer sheet.

6. When Mr. Tyler was a teenager, why didn't he have enough time to go to movies, play baseball, or talk to girls? Give as many details as possible. Answer in Japanese.

4 A high school student is giving the new ALT a tour of the school. Choose the best word or words to complete the conversation. (10 %)

Student: Are you Mr. David?

ALT: Yes, but my last name is Miller. You can (1)(call/name/say) me Mr. Miller or just David.

Student: Oh, sorry, Mr. Miller.

ALT: No problem! And you are?

Student: My name is Yuki. I'm here to show you around the school.

ALT: Nice to meet you, Yuki. I appreciate you (2)(take/taken/taking) the time.

Student: My pleasure. Shall we go up to the third floor first?

ALT: Sure. Lead the way!

[They go up to the third floor.]

Student: This floor is mostly classrooms for the freshmen.

ALT: I've (3)(heard/listened/told) that Japanese high school students spend most of the day in the same classroom.

Student: That's right. Most of our classes take place in our homeroom. We go to other places for special classes, like the gym for PE.

ALT: That's new to me.

Student: Isn't that the way (4)(others/they/we) do it in America?

ALT: No, in fact it's just the opposite. Students usually have a homeroom in the morning, and then they go to a different classroom for each subject.

Student: What about the teachers?

ALT: The teachers stay in the same room all day. They have their own room and the students come to them for class.

Student: I think it (5)(was/were/would be) interesting to go to a different classroom each period.

ALT: It also means the teachers can give their room the stamp of their own personality.

5 以下の指示にしたがって，120 語以上の英語で答えなさい。

うそをつくというのは全く許されない行為なのでしょうか。うそをついてもよい場合もあるのでしょうか。具体例を示しながら，あなたの考えを述べなさい。(25 %)